

Luxe Nomad

LEE TULLOCH

It's my wedding anniversary this weekend. Another decade chalked up. Having spent the past few weeks mulling over somewhere wonderful to go to celebrate, I thought I'd share with you 10 of my favourite romantic hotels and resorts around the world, any one of which I would happily check into this weekend.

The Little Polynesian, Rarotonga, Cook Islands Set on the prettiest beach on the island, Rarotonga's upscale boutique hotel has been there for some time although its simple elegance hasn't dated. Ten thatched beachfront bungalows (and four garden bungalows) are pure beachcomber bliss, just a stretch of white sand between you and the lagoon. It's very unpretentious, which is why this group of islands only a few hours' flight away is my new favourite place.

The Four Seasons Gresham Palace, Budapest Glittering Budapest is one of the most romantic cities in the world. I adore this intriguing city with its influences from the Ottomans and Habsburgs. The spot to stay is the Four Seasons, a magnificent restoration of an old art nouveau building on the Danube, which has all the atmosphere of a more opulent era.

Alila Villas Uluwatu, Bali I hate the word "stunning" but I'll use it here. This exquisite cliff-top resort featuring a wood-slatted sunset cabana bar that floats midair 100 metres above the ocean has won several design awards but I like it for its soft touches – delicious cooking, lovely staff and nurturing spa treatments. The villas all have private pools and cabanas – and room service, so you can hunker down in complete seclusion.

The Daniel, Paris This sweet little Relais & Chateaux hotel is located just off the Champs Elysees, in a quiet side street. The charming, small rooms, decorated in eclectic style, all feel like they're locations in a novel by Colette. There's even a cosy artists' garret if you want to stay tucked in, watching the rain on the window.

Casa Angelina, Amalfi Coast, Italy This boutique hotel hangs over the Mediterranean in the village of Praiano, next to Positano, with views across to Capri. All-white rooms make you feel you're suspended between earth and sky. Most romantic are the Eaudesea suites down a path to the beach, incorporating the texture of rockface into the room design.

Six Senses Laamu, Maldives Laamu is the most southerly atoll in the Maldives, so you can't get very much more remote than this.

The beautiful eco resort is full of honeymooners, like everywhere in this island nation, but can feel like it's your own island, especially if you have a private beach villa with its own sandy path to the sea.

Nomad, New York This newish hotel occupies a 1903 Beaux Arts building with beautiful curved corner windows and many original features, including the opulent ceiling mouldings and tiled floors. Designer Jacques Garcia turned the rooms into lush little Parisian-style bolt holes with a discrete, almost erotic ambience. The corner bedrooms are gorgeous.

Tea Trails, Sri Lanka Four heritage bungalows are set on 500 hectares of tea plantation in the cool hills overlooking the Bogawantalawa Valley. It's the full colonial experience – croquet lawns, afternoon tea on the terrace and my favourite, "bed tea", breakfast tea served in bed. You can walk between the bungalows and visit the villages of the tea pickers – who have quite a different experience of life.

Falaknuma, Hyderabad, India This hilltop palace was once the home of the seventh Nizam of Hyderabad, the world's richest man in the 1930s. It's opulent and exotic, with glorious gardens and vistas, and the sound and scents of mosques rising up from the city below. Many rooms are in the old harem.

Dolphin Island, Fiji We spent a significant wedding anniversary on this tiny private island, set on six hectares, 40 minutes by helicopter from Nadi. We had it to ourselves for three nights, with a house-keeper and staff catering to our every whim. The resort, part of Huka Retreats, has been renovated recently and it's somewhat more expensive but worth considering if you want to bring some friends along for a blow-out celebration.

So – where are we going this year? I'm not telling. T

Budapest is one of the most romantic cities in the world.